Not illustrated. 1859 Excerpt: .in which the cartridge is placed after having been dipped, so that it may be gauged; the hole to receive it is 582 of an inch in diameter for the Enfield rifle cartridge. There is a small orifice at the bottom of this gauge, to allow the composition to flow out. The filling-machine is shown in fig. 1: A is the receptacle for the powder; B is a handle, by turning which the powder is allowed to escape into either the tube C or F; D is a handle, by means of which either C or F is alternately brought underneath the receptacle A and over the funnel E, by which the charge is introduced to the cartridge. Packing Small-arms Cartridges. For this purpose the slip, or packing-paper, is laid upon the table; a cartridge is laid parallel to the nearest end, bullet to the right; the slip is then rolled once round. The second cartridge is then laid under it close to the first, the bullet towards the left; the remainder, up to the first five, are thus laid alternately over, and under the slip, the bullets ends alternately reversed. When five have been thus laid, the remainder of the slip is passed over and the sixth cartridge placed at the same time in the double; the seventh is then placed over the second, the bullet towards the right, and the rest are alternately placed over and under, as before, until ten have been laid;...
