Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: .of the groups of them clustered round that church, complete in apse and transept and long nave, the high spire with its open belfry gleaming in the light by reason of the metal armour with which it is covered. Churches of the time of the first settling of the land were erected at every seven miles. The erection of a church and school is still the first care of the priests as soon as a few families have collected. It is remarkable how the overflow of the population has not gravitated only into the New England States, but also northward. Up the tributaries of the Ottawa, the Riviere Rouge, the Lievre, and others, colonisation roads are being constructed, and a good soil with heavy wood has tempted many a stout habitan. But by far the most successful instance of fresh colonisation is to be met with in the district about 100 miles to the north of Quebec, along the southern side of the Lake of St. John. This is a big sheet of water. On the north the country is higher, but stretching along the other side, from the point at which the waters are discharged into the Saguenay river, there is a vast amount of flat land, capable of keeping 150,000 to 200,000 souls, as it is estimated. Probably there are 20,000 there already, although these have found their way up the water-channels, there being no other road. In 1851 the first tree was cut...
