On a certain February afternoon, before the century had reached middle age, a red-coated, mud-splashed horseman was riding leisurely towards Whalley from the north. Sport had been good, and he felt as happy as a man can feel who has ridden boldly and been well carried in the best run of the season--that is to say, very happy indeed. At Pendleton Bar he paused to pay the toll; then, tucking his hunting-crop under his arm, he produced a cigar-case, lighted a cigar, and resumed his journey. u Hi! hi! hi! shouted a shrill voice behind him. The gentleman, turning round, saw a lad in clogs and a corduroy suit running with all his might. Sir, sir, yove lost yer whip, yove lost yer whip, he cried, holding up the implement in...
